PRESS RELEASE

Date: September 12, 2008

The “Successful Practice in Technology Integration” EastConn grant enabled students from Capt. Nathan Hale Middle School in Coventry to use art, history, and technology in the creation of books, murals, and display boards that depict the history of the last Green Valley. Student work, both in print and art, consists of traveling and permanent exhibits throughout eastern Connecticut. This year's project will involve the creation of bookmarks that illustrate the heritage of our state. They will be distributed to Connecticut's school children. Art teacher Scott Rhoades and history teacher Dr. Al Scopino will be honored at a recognition luncheon at the end of the month at the Capitol Region Education Council Central Office where the Commissioner of Education, Dr. Mark McQuillan, will be the featured speaker.
